

Does your manager just delegate tasks?

Do they like to micromanage?

Do they not have a vision?

If so, you should run! Here's why...

I know I have experienced all three, and it was pretty frustrating!! Managers who sit and delegate tasks and activities, those who micromanage because they fail to connect with their team, and managers who try to lead and provide direction without a clear shared vision! Horrible! In these situations, motivation, creativity, and loyalty get sucked right out of the employee. They become disengaged and stagnant in their work. Some refer to this as “quiet quitting.” While we can probably go down a rabbit hole with that one.... we will leave it right there and get back to these Maniacal Managers!

I would say when you start to experience these red flags, run! Run as if your career depended on it because, well....it does! To be an effective leader, you need the right amount of motivation, topped with a shared vision. The goal is to inspire people to do their best and be their best while making a difference in this world. Influential leaders, not maniacal managers, create successful people and successful organizations. Which one will you show up as??
